Description

With the recent ruling on Fisher v. University of Texas at Austin and its connection to affirmative action as it pertains to college admission, as well as discussions and commentary about campus diversity by the media and researchers around the country, the topic of diverse college campuses has become a pertinent point of discussion for both universities and programs that support underrepresented students.

Inspired by a recent edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education, which documents the efforts of colleges and universities to diversify both their faculty and student populations, and by my own college's efforts to effectively attract and support a diverse student and professorial body, this circle was created.
